Investment Commentary

The risk-on rally continued in April, culminating in the best start to a year since 2007. The S&P 500 ended the month with a 4% gain, closing at record highs on four occasions, three of which came in the last three trading days of the month. US earnings have been received positively so far, central banks have re-affirmed their collectively dovish stance and a continued lack of market volatility provided a favourable backdrop for risk assets (the VIX index has fallen by approximately 50% this year). Credit markets also enjoyed a solid month, especially high yield credit. Government bonds were the laggards within fixed income, with gilts struggling (-1.6%). Commodity returns were mixed, with oil one of the best performing of all assets (+6.3%) and copper one of the worst (-1.2%).
